Johann Sebastian Bach

St Matthew Passion, BWV 244

165 minutes

ABOUT THE WORK

Bach's St Matthew Passion was written for the Good Friday vespers at St Thomas's Church in Leipzig, where he had been cantor since 1723. It is now generally thought to have been heard there for the first time on 11 April 1727, although some older accounts place the first performance two years later. If the earlier date is right, the work turns three hundred in the spring of 2027.

WHAT TO LISTEN FOR

The opening chorus is a vast lament over a slow, steady tread in the bass. The first choir calls ‘Kommt, ihr Töchter, helft mir klagen’ (Come, daughters, help me mourn) and the second breaks in with single-word questions: whom? how? what? Above them a line of high voices, here the children’s choir, sings the chorale ‘O Lamm Gottes, unschuldig’ in long notes.

From there the Evangelist, a tenor, tells the story in recitative with only the continuo instruments beneath him. Whenever Jesus speaks, the strings surround his voice with sustained chords, an effect often called a halo. It is withdrawn once, at his last words from the cross, ‘Eli, Eli, lama asabthani’.

The chorus plays two parts. As the crowd it is quick and violent: the one-word shout ‘Barrabam!’, and ‘Lass ihn kreuzigen’ (Let him be crucified), sung twice. In the chorales it is the congregation. One melody, ‘O Haupt voll Blut und Wunden’, returns five times with different verses, and its last appearance, just after the death of Jesus, is one of the stillest moments of the evening.

The arias are sung by voices outside the story, each paired with one or a few solo instruments. ‘Erbarme dich’ (Have mercy), for alto, follows Peter’s denial. In the soprano’s ‘Aus Liebe will mein Heiland sterben’ (Out of love my Saviour is willing to die) Bach removes the strings and the bass line altogether, something very rare in Baroque music, and the voice seems to hang in the air. Near the end the bass sings ‘Mache dich, mein Herze, rein’ (Make yourself pure, my heart), a calm, rocking aria for the evening of the burial.

The Passion closes without any hint of Easter. The two choirs sit down at the tomb in ‘Wir setzen uns mit Tränen nieder’ (We sit down in tears) and wish the dead man rest.

Tonight's artists

Valerio Contaldo Evangelist

The Evangelist tells the whole story, in recitative, across some three hours, and the pacing of the evening depends on him more than on anyone except the conductor. Valerio Contaldo has worked with Leonardo García Alarcón before, in Monteverdi's Orfeo, and the Bach Passions are a regular part of his concert work.

Valerio Contaldo is a tenor who was born in Italy and grew up in the Swiss canton of Valais. He trained first as a classical guitarist and then studied singing with Gary Magby at the Lausanne Conservatoire. He is best known in Baroque music, from Monteverdi, whose Orfeo he has sung in the title role, to the Passions and oratorios of Bach.

Andreas Wolf Christus

The words of Jesus are sung by a bass, and each time he speaks the strings of the first orchestra hold long chords around the voice. Andreas Wolf, who sings a good deal of Bach and Handel, takes the part here.

Andreas Wolf is a German bass-baritone. He had his first musical training at the specialist music school in Wernigerode, where he sang in the Rundfunk-Jugendchor, and from 2002 studied at the University of Music in Detmold. On stage he has sung Mozart roles such as Guglielmo and Leporello; in concert he is heard mainly in Bach, Handel and other Baroque and Classical repertoire.

Sophie Junker soprano

The soprano has the aria that stands at the centre of Part Two, ‘Aus Liebe will mein Heiland sterben’, sung without strings or continuo. Sophie Junker, who has made her name in Handel and other Baroque repertoire, sings it.

Sophie Junker, born in 1985, is a Belgian soprano. She studied at the IMEP in Namur and at the Guildhall School of Music and Drama in London, and in 2010 she won first prize in the London Handel Festival singing competition. Much of her work has been in Baroque music, Handel’s above all.

Hugh Cutting countertenor

The alto arias go to a countertenor in these performances. They include ‘Erbarme dich’, sung after Peter has denied Jesus for the third time, one of the best-known arias Bach wrote.

Hugh Cutting is a British countertenor. He was a choral scholar at St John’s College, Cambridge, and went on to the Royal College of Music. In 2021 he became the first countertenor to win the Kathleen Ferrier Award, and he was a BBC New Generation Artist from 2022 to 2024. He sings Baroque opera and oratorio and also gives song recitals.

Laurence Kilsby tenor

With the Evangelist’s narration given to another singer, Laurence Kilsby sings the tenor arias, among them ‘Geduld’ (Patience) in Part Two. He was the tenor soloist in the orchestra’s St Matthew Passion a year earlier.

Laurence Kilsby is a young British tenor rapidly gaining international recognition for his vivid stage presence and expressive musicianship. In 2023 he was a winner of the international song competition run by the Heidelberger Frühling festival. He is increasingly in demand across opera, song and the Baroque repertoire.

Alex Rosen bass

The bass arias include ‘Mache dich, mein Herze, rein’, sung in the evening calm after the crucifixion. Alex Rosen has toured Bach’s St John Passion with Les Arts Florissants.

Alex Rosen is an American bass from California. He trained at the Juilliard School and made his international debut with Les Arts Florissants under William Christie, on tours of Haydn’s Creation and Handel’s Acis and Galatea. He appears in opera and in concert, often in Baroque repertoire and with period-instrument ensembles.

Netherlands Chamber Choir choir

Bach wrote for two choirs that answer each other across the stage, sing together as the crowd and join in the chorales. Nikolaus Harnoncourt first brought the Netherlands Chamber Choir into the orchestra’s Passion performances in 1975, for the St John Passion.

The Netherlands Chamber Choir (Nederlands Kamerkoor), founded in 1937, is among the most renowned professional chamber choirs in the world. It is celebrated for the precision, blend and expressive range of its singing across an enormous repertoire, from Renaissance polyphony to a long list of newly commissioned works, and it collaborates regularly with leading orchestras and conductors. Its artistry brings both refinement and dramatic presence to the choral writing in Weill’s Der Silbersee.

National Children's Choir choir

In the opening chorus a separate line of high voices sings the chorale 'O Lamm Gottes, unschuldig' over the two adult choirs. That line belongs to the National Children's Choir.

The National Children's Choir (Nationaal Kinderkoor), part of the Nationale Koren, is a leading Dutch choir of young voices and a regular partner of the country's orchestras for works requiring a children's chorus.
